embers of the Committee of Conference were exmembers of the Committee of Conference were excluded from all discussion and consideration of the question. Now, the very object of a conference is that the majority may hear the views of the minority, upon the principle that discussion clears up even subjects with which men suppose themselves to be familiar, and which is the great safeguard of legislation, just as cross-examination is the great safeguard of justice in a court of hw. What discussions took place among the people representing the Democratic party I have no means of knowing. The secrets of the prison house have received but very slight exposure. What the motives were which induced the Senate to modify the bill more than 600 times we shall never know. Then came the letter of the President, in which he declared that therewere two Democratic principles, fixed and immovable. One was free coal and the other was free iron. It characterized, from his point of view, the bill as it actually passed. He pointed out that it was utterly unjustifiable to put the farmers' wool upon the free list and leave the miners' coal and the miners' iron ore upon the taxed list, and charged that the passage of such a bill as was sent by the Senate to the House would be an act of party perfoly and of party dishonor. Everybody knows that this bill, which, according to the Democratic view, contained party perfidy and party dishonor, was passed by the House, and that they violated every rule of parliamentary law in order to enable them to pass it.

That such a bill can list long it is impossible to believe, it was generally supposed in Washington that the most satisfactory and reasonable schedule factory and reasonable schedule factory and reasonable schedule was the schedule factory and reasonable schedule factory a hasty and incompetent way in which the bill was passed.

I have not permitted myself to comment upon the scandalous stories or even the visible scandal connected with the passage of the tax upon sugar. But it is due to the country that the aspects of it which are suitable for comment should be carefully and been jumped after by the House, the Democratic nartisans attempted what I denounced at the time as a transparent endeavor to shift from themselves the terrible responsibility which they had just taken upon themselves. The Republican party in the bill of 1830 had given this country free sugar. If there is a necessity in life, that is one, and we had freed the terrible responsibility which they had just asked upon themselves. The Republican party in the bill of 1850 had given this country free sugar. If there is a necessity in life, that is one, and we had freed a entirely from the tax-gatherer.

As there existed certain industries in the Democratic State of Louisiana, and as we hoped that in the great States of California, Nebraska and Kansas the great industry of sugar-producing might be carled on to such an extent as to furnish the entire country with all the sugar it needed for its consumption, we determined not only on the instincts of justice toward Louisiana, but feeling that it would be a paying investment to this country, to secure, as France had done, the production of beet sugar; we determined to bestow a bounty upon the production of sugar upon all four of those States, and such other States as it might prove to be profitable in. The result in Louisiana has been a tremendous increase of sugar production, and there was every prospect that in other States the heet-sugar industry would take wide proportions and furnish not only sugar for the country, but also occupation and profit for farmers who would produce the raw material.

Everybody knew it, no matter how they that it may always a sumply a company to company which was used to be a sumply a company to company the control with was going through the House. close of the List Congress, the last in which the Republicans were in control, the country was the expenditures of the country. The country was then prosperous, capable of spending all the money that it needed for its own convenience, for the doing of justice and for the protection of itself on nd land. It was declared that the List Con-"the Eillion-Dollar Congress," had ruined the country, had been unfaithful to its trust, and above all, had shown itself unable to restrain the attacks made upon the United States Treasury. I need not tell you how the next House of Representatives, under the lead of Judge Holman, exceeded the expenditures of the Congress which they derided by something over $50,000,000. But I desire to point out to you the stranger fact that at a time when the revenues of the South are decreasing, when it has been already necessary to put out $50,000,000 of interest-hearing bonds, the expenditures of the first session of the Lilid Congress, with both houses under Democratic rule, have exceeded the expenditures of the first session of the List Congress by $27,000,000.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Governor Sayers, who is himself an exceedingly fair man, has endeavored to make figures which would indicate that the first session of the Lilid Congress, which was Democratic, was $25,000,000 more exonomical than the second session of the Lilid Congress, the House of which was Democratic alone. But a comparison of figures will create alone. But a comparison of figures will
